POLICE OBTAIN SEALED SEARCH WARRANT FOR PRINCE'S RESIDENCE

Authorities in Minnesota obtained a search warrant in connection with the death of pop star Prince and also won a court order to keep the findings secret, documents showed Thursday. Chief Deputy Jason Kamerud of the Carver County, Minnesota, sheriff's office cited intense media scrutiny surrounding the death of the 57-year-old performer in his request for a state district court judge to seal the warrant. Prince, whose full name was Prince Rogers Nelson, died at his home, a compound known as Paisley Park, in suburban Minneapolis on April 21. Authorities investigating the death found prescription opioid medication on him, according to news outlets CNN, the Minneapolis Star Tribune and others, which cited anonymous law enforcement sources. US MILITARY PUNISHES 16 OVER 2015 AFGHAN HOSPITAL BOMBING

The U.S. military will announce Friday that has it taken disciplinary action against 16 service members over a deadly Oct. 3 air strike in Afghanistan that destroyed a hospital run by the international medical charity Medecins Sans Frontieres (Doctors Without Borders), U.S. officials tell Reuters. The disclosure of the nonjudicial punishments will come during the release of the findings of a U.S. military investigation into the incident, which will broadly conclude that the strike was a tragic mistake, the officials said, speaking on condition of anonymity. LAWSUIT AGAINST EX-US HOUSE SPEAKER HASTERT CAN PROCEED: JUDGE

A $1.8 million civil lawsuit filed by a victim of former U.S. House Speaker Dennis Hastert, convicted of a financial crime linked to sexual abuse of high school wrestlers decades ago, can proceed, an Illinois judge ruled Thursday. Hastert, 74, once one of the country's most powerful politicians, was sentenced Wednesday to 15 months in federal prison. During the sentencing hearing, Hastert acknowledged sexually abusing boys when he was a teacher and coach in his hometown of Yorkville, Illinois. The victim, identified as James Doe, filed the civil lawsuit in Kendall County Circuit Court in northeastern Illinois, claiming Hastert owes him the unpaid portion of a $3.5 million deal they verbally agreed to in 2008 to compensate him for decades of pain and suffering. January snowfall breaks records

New Yorkers have the right stuff for the white stuff. GETTY IMAGES

The initial measurement of 26.8 inches in Central Park is being adjusted upward to 27.5 inches — a new record for the city.

ANGY ALTAMIRANO

letters@metro.us

New Yorkers knew last January's blizzard was bad, but what they are just now learning is they lived through the city's worst snowstorm in history.

More than three months after an East Coast blizzard hit New York City from January 22 to 23, the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration (NOAA) announced that a review of preliminary snow measurements for Central Park found that they were inaccurate.

Due to the storm's historic nature and some concerns raised on initial amounts, the National Weather Service (NWS) formed a "snow team" — made up of seven meteorologists — to review the snowfalls.

The team found that the preliminary total in New York City of 26.8 inches was inaccurate and will adjusted upward to 27.5 inches.

Once the new measurement is certified by the NOAA's National Centers for Environmental Information, it will become an all-time snowfall record for the city — beating the 2010 record of 26.9 inches.

According to the NOAA, the inaccuracy was due to a communication error between the weather forecast office in Upton, New York and the Central Park Conservancy, which volunteers to take the official measurements at the Manhattan park.

The team found the mistake in snow total after reviewing the Conservancy's logbook.

"Snow measurements are extremely difficult to take because precipitation is inherently variable, a problem compounded by strong winds and compaction during a long duration event," said Louis Uccellini, Ph.D., director of the NWS. "Still, it's important that we scrutinize questionable measurements and reject those that scientists deem invalid to ensure the public's continued confidence in the U.S. climate record."

Through the review process, the team looked at snow totals at eight official snow measuring locations between Washington, D.C. and New York City and also evaluated if standard procedures, which are developed by the FAA and based on NWS guidelines, were followed to measure the snowfall.

The meteorologists found that although the recorded total of 17.8 inches at Ronald Reagan Washington National Airport in Washington, D.C. was accurate, the initial reading for New Jersey's Newark International Airport was too high.

27.5 INCHES IN JANUARY 2016

26.9 INCHES IN JANUARY 2010

According to the NOAA, the measurement of 28.1 inches was invalid because snow was measured hourly instead of the standard method of measuring every six hours. Meteorologist at the National Weather Service will now go through trying to figure out the accurate total before sending it to the NOAA's National Centers for Environmental Information for approval. As a result of the inaccuracy, the 27.8 inches of snow measured in 1996 for Newark will remain the record.

Measurements at the other sites which were part of the review — which included Dulles International Airport in Virginia, Baltimore/Washington International Airport, John F. Kennedy International Airport, LaGuardia Airport and Philadelphia International Airport — were all determined to be accurate.

According to John Bolaris, meteorologist and Metro weather columnist, the inaccuracy in the measurements is common due to the nature of the conditions during the snowstorms and also what he calls "primitive" measuring methods.

"Anytime you are measuring snow, especially if there are blizzard conditions, you are never going to have a 100 percent accurate snow amount," he said. "You take it with a grain of salt."

He added that the way meteorologists use to measure snowfall — using what is called a measuring snowboard — is still very antiquated and needs to develop in order to reach more accurate totals.

"Weather is not an exact science, measuring the snow is not exact," he said.

Key political allies of Mayor Bill de Blasio have been subpoenaed in connection to a growing federal and state investigation into his fundraising activities.

Emma Wolfe, the mayor's chief political aide, and Ross Offinger, his top fundraiser, were subpoenaed as investigators sought documents related to the mayor's efforts to increase the Democratic presence in the state senate and his fundraising for a nonprofit set up to advance his agenda, The Wall Street Journal reported.

"City Hall has been subpoenaed by the New York County District Attorney's Office and the U.S. Attorney's Office for the Southern District, and we are fully cooperating with the investigation," Maya Wiley, counsel to the mayor, told the New York Daily News, adding that the mayor has not been served.

BerlinRosen, a consulting firm that has worked on de Blasio's political campaigns, was also subpoenaed, according to the Journal. The firm's co-founder, Jonathan Rosen, is considered a top adviser to the mayor.

"We have acted appropriately and in accordance with the law at all times." Rosen

"We're proud of the work we do for our clients," Rosen told the Daily News. "We have acted appropriately and in accordance with the law at all times."

Earlier, a report from New York's Board of Elections alleged "willful and flagrant" violations on the part of the mayor and his allies in an effort to evade contribution limits and disguise contributors' true names as they aimed to build a Democratic majority in the senate, according to published reports.

In a rebuttal to the Board of Elections report, a lawyer for de Blasio said the allegations were politically motivated. De Blasio has said the Board of Elections accusations were "outrageous" and that he did nothing wrong.

DA: Queens man indicted for killing girlfriend's Chihuahua

A Jackson Heights man has been hit with a slew of charges in the first case brought by the Queens District Attorney's Animal Cruelty Prosecutions Unit after he allegedly killed his girlfriend's small dog earlier this year by slamming it against the floor during an argument.

Carlos Hernandez, 33, was arraigned Wednesday on an eight-count indictment charging him with aggravated cruelty to animals, counts of robbery, grand larceny, criminal mischief, endangering the welfare of a child, harassment, and disorderly conduct.

According to prosecutors, on Jan. 10 at about 6:15 a.m. Hernandez was inside the apartment he had been sharing with his girlfriend and her 11-year-old daughter in Forest Hills when he started a verbal argument with the woman.

During the argument, Hernandez allegedly grabbed his girlfriend's 3-year-old Chihuahua out of her arms and slammed the dog against the floor, authorities said.

This caused the small dog to bleed from its ears and collapse on the floor where it died just minutes later.

The woman's daughter, who also took care of the dog together with her mother, was allegedly present during the incident, prosecutors said.

"The defendant is accused of aggravated cruelty to animals for pulling his girlfriend's small dog out of her arms during an argument and killing the helpless animal by violently throwing the dog to the floor," said Queens District Attorney Richard A. Brown. "Such acts of aggressions toward animals cannot — and will not — be tolerated."

Hernandez's bail was set at $7,500 and he is expected to return to court July 6. If convicted, the 33-year-old faces up to seven years in jail.

ANGY ALTAMIRANO

New unit

Brown said that Hernandez's indictment was the first one to be brought by his Animal Cruelty Prosecutions Unit, which was created in January and is also the first of its kind in a district attorney's office in New York City.

The unit will investigate and prosecute animal cruelty in Queens and also educate the public on how to prevent and detect animal abuse.

Uber pilot tests fee charge after 2-minute wait time

The new rules apply to waiting times, but not all cancellations.

CRISTABELLE TUMOLA
@MetroNewYork
letters@metro.us

Uber users better be on time or be ready to pay up, as the ride-share app is changing its waiting policy in select locations as part of a pilot.

Riders in New York will now have just two minutes to cancel a trip without a penalty, TheVerge.com reported. It was previously five minutes.

Also, drivers can charge the city's per-minute rate for every minute waited if the passenger takes more than two minutes to arrive.

The pilot program is also taking place in Phoenix, Dallas and New Jersey.

Another change includes a cancellation fee if the rider cancels before the Uber shows up. It was previously five minutes. But fees are not applied if the provided pickup time is longer than expected.

According to CNN, UberPool rides, where passengers can split the rides and costs, already have the two-minute policy in place.

The program aims to "encourage passengers to meet their cars faster," CNET reported, and also decrease driver waiting time and increase fares.

The new rule could be frustrating for customers, CNET reported, as "two minutes isn't a long time to spot an unfamiliar car, especially if your phone's GPS is slightly off or you have to, say, cross a busy street to get to it.

Uber's proposed class-action settlement leaves some dissatisfied

Uber's proposed settlement of a high-profile class-action lawsuit last week has drawn opposition from some drivers and other concerned parties as the ride-hailing service seeks to avoid reclassifying drivers as employees.

The settlement, which still must be approved by a San Francisco federal judge, provides for a $100 million payout to drivers.

The deal contains a number of caveats and contingencies, however, such as making $16 million of the payout to drivers dependent on Uber Technologies Inc.'s future valuation increasing by 150 percent. Moreover, the settlement's non-monetary provisions are set to expire in two years, although Uber may choose to keep them in place after that.

"If there were going to be any teeth to this settlement, [the expiration] wouldn't be there," said Christian Perea, an Uber driver. REUTERS

Man dressed as construction worker tries to rob Queens bank

Police are looking for a suspect who attempted to rob an Astoria bank Wednesday afternoon while dressed in full construction gear.

On April 27 at about 3:40 p.m., the suspect — described as a black man between 25 and 35 years old — entered the Sussex County Bank, located at 26-21 Astoria Blvd., according to authorities.

The man then took out a gun while he demanded money, police said, but ran away westbound on Astoria Boulevard empty-handed.

The NYPD — who released surveillance images of the man — describes him to be between 5 foot-10 and 5-foot-11, and weighting about 180 pounds. He was last seen wearing a hard hat, reflective vest, a dust mask, gloves and dark sunglasses.

MUGGING

Bronx woman charged with mugging blind 103-year-old

A Bronx woman was arraigned on Wednesday in connection to a violent robbery that left a legally blind centenarian on the floor yelling for help.

Sharon McNeil, 53, has been charged with various counts of assault and robbery stemming from an incident in which she allegedly mugged 103-year-old Co-op City resident Louise Signore, Bronx DA Darcel D. Clark announced.

"Robbing an elderly person is a cowardly act, but using force on such a vulnerable person is cold-hearted and unconscionable. This victim's courage to bring her alleged assailant to justice should not be underestimated," Clark said.

On April 1, McNeil allegedly followed Signore inside her building as she returned home from a community center, according to Clark. When the victim, who was pushing a shopping cart, got off the elevator on her floor, Clark said that McNeil attacked her and took the shopping cart, leaving Signore on the floor in pain, yelling for help.

The shopping cart contained Signore's handbag, which held $30, a magnifying glass and her hearing aid, according to Clark.

McNeil is due back in court on June 1 to face robbery, assault and grand larceny charges, the district attorney added.

JetBlue will boost service from Boston to LaGuardia

JetBlue planes GETTY IMAGES

JetBlue Airways Corp. will start six round-trip flights per weekday between New York's space-constrained LaGuardia airport and Boston in October, seeking to capture business travelers on the heavily trafficked route, the company said on Thursday.

JetBlue said it would move some of its LaGuardia-Florida flights to nearby Newark Liberty airport to free up take-off slots for the new Boston flights, now that the U.S. Federal Aviation Administration has made it easier for airlines to grow at Newark.

The moves take aim at United Continental Holdings Inc, which has a grip on Newark air service, and more crucially Delta Air Lines Inc and American Airlines Group Inc, which operate hourly flights from LaGuardia to Boston.

Atlanta-based Delta is the largest airline at LaGuardia, scheduling more than 40 percent of its flights including the "shuttle" service to Boston, Washington and Chicago that business travelers like for the airport's proximity to Manhattan, relative to distant Kennedy airport, and for the flights' frequency and amenities.

JetBlue said earlier this week that corporate travel demand is stagnant, although it has gained share of the lucrative market. While the likes of Delta still have long-standing corporate contracts and more LaGuardia flights, JetBlue hopes to attract business and leisure travelers who would have traveled from other airports or by train.

MORE ROUND-TRIP FLIGHTS PER WEEKDAY

"The FAA's decision to ease slot restrictions at Newark allows us to bring more low-fare, award-winning service to Newark, and clears the way for a long overdue alternative between LaGuardia and Boston for those who have been priced out of air travel and onto the roads and rails by high-fare legacy carriers," JetBlue Chief Executive Officer Robin Hayes said in a news release.

JetBlue said its extra Newark flights to five airports in Florida will begin on Oct. 30, when the FAA's action takes effect. Its LaGuardia-Boston flights will start the following day, with one-way fares beginning at $49 compared to round-trip tickets on Delta and American for $281 or more.

Teen births hit historic low with plunge in minority rate

The birth rate among teenagers in the United States has fallen to a historic low, with births by black and Hispanic teens down by nearly half over the past decade, the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention (CDC) said on Thursday.

Birth rates for all American teenagers are down 40 percent since 2006, thanks in part to prevention programs that address socioeconomic conditions such as unemployment and lower education levels, the CDC said.

But officials said the U.S. teen birth rate was still too high, especially for minorities, and more work was needed.

The annual survey shows the continuation of a downward trend that began in 2006 and continued through 2014, the latest year of complete data, when nearly 250,000 babies were born to girls and women aged 15 to 19.

The birth rate of 24.2 per 1,000 women in this age group is down 9 percent from 2013 and the lowest among 15- to 19-year-olds since 1940, the CDC said.

For black teens the 2014 rate was 34.9 per 1,000 and for Hispanics it was 38.0.

"While reasons for the declines are not clear, teens seem to be less sexually active, and more of those who are sexually active seem to be using birth control than in previous years," the CDC said.

Still, officials said the rates were too high.

According a report published last year by the Journal of Adolescent Health, the United States had the highest teen pregnancy rate among 21 counties with complete statistics, with 57 pregnancies per 1,000 females from 2008 to 2011. Switzerland had the lowest rate at 8 per 1,000.

The amendment would require women aged 18-26 to register for the selective service. GETTY IMAGES

Women might soon be required to register for the military draft

American women could be required to register for the military draft as soon as next year under an amendment to a defense policy bill passed by a House of Representatives committee on Thursday, and supported by some key members of the Senate.

The House Armed Services Committee voted 32-30 to pass an amendment to the $602 billion National Defense Authorization Act, or NDAA, that would require women aged 18-26 to register for the selective service, once all combat roles are open to women.

Defense Secretary Ash Carter announced last year that all combat positions would be open to women, which immediately prompted calls that women should be required to register.

The U.S. military has been an all-volunteer force since the 1970s, but young men have been required to register in case the draft is reactivated.

Republican Representative Duncan Hunter, a former Marine who does not want women drafted and opposes their inclusion in special operations or infantry units, said he introduced the amendment to start a discussion.

He voted against the amendment in the committee, but five other Republicans joined Democrats to pass it.

If it remains in the version of the NDAA passed by the full House and Senate, then men and women aged 18-26 would be required to register for the selective service starting 90 days after the bill is enacted at the beginning of 2017, or 90 days after the Pentagon certifies to Congress that all combat specialties are open to women.

The military is currently working toward that certification.

The idea of the draft received some key endorsements in the Senate. Two women members of the Senate Armed Services Committee, Democrat Claire McCaskill and Republican Joni Ernst both said they favored registration for women. Ernst is the first female U.S. military veteran to serve in the Senate.

Republican Sen. John McCain, the committee's chairman, also said he favored the idea.

"It seems to me that if they are taking on a combat role that also means they would be eligible for registration," he told reporters. McCain added that his tendency would be go along with the view of the women on his committee, who "have a better insight than I do."

Brother of San Bernardino shooter arrested with two others

The trio included Syed Raheel Farook, whose brother Syed Rizwan Farook and sister-in-law, Pakistan-born Tashfeen Malik, killed 14 people in a rampage that authorities have said was inspired by Islamist militants.

Three people linked to the couple responsible for December's mass shooting in San Bernardino, California were arrested on Thursday on conspiracy, marriage fraud and other charges unrelated to the massacre, U.S. prosecutors said.

Attorneys for the three did not immediately return calls seeking comment. But officials said the charges against them stemmed from an immigration-related investigation that spun off their probe into the massacre.

U.S. Navy veteran Syed Raheel Farook, 31, his wife, Tatiana Farook, 31, and her sister Mariya Chernykh, 26, were arrested by federal agents after being charged with conspiracy to make a false statement to immigration officials while under oath, the U.S. Attorney's Office said in a statement.

The investigation found that in 2014 Enrique Marquez, who had been a friend of Syed Rizwan Farook, allegedly agreed in return for payment to marry Chernykh, a Russian citizen, so she could apply for permanent U.S. residency status, charging documents stated.

Chernykh also was charged with fraud and two counts of making material false statements to federal agents.

Syed Raheel Farook and Tatiana Farook, who like her sister is originally from Russia, staged photos of Marquez and Chernykh to make them look like a married couple and created a joint bank account for the two, according to the charging documents. The Farooks were arrested at their home in Corona while Chernykh was arrested in Ontario.

Marquez was charged on Dec. 18 with conspiring with Syed Rizwan Farook in 2011 and 2012 to support a militant attack in Southern California that was never carried out. He has pleaded not guilty.

Syed Rizwan Farook and his wife died in a shootout with police hours after the Dec. 2 San Bernardino attack.

The alleged sham marriage first surfaced in December, when Marquez also was charged with defrauding immigration authorities.

Syed Raheel Farook and Tatiana Farook, who are both U.S. citizens, if convicted of conspiracy each face a maximum sentence of five years in prison, while Chernykh if convicted of all charges faces up to 25 years, prosecutors said. They are scheduled to appear in court on Thursday afternoon.

Under U.S. law, Chernykh could also be deported to Russia if convicted. REUTERS

"Today's arrests open a new phase in the process of bringing to justice all individuals who allegedly committed crimes that were uncovered during our exhaustive investigation."

RACE FOR THE WHITE HOUSE

Trump garners two more endorsements in Congress

Of the 300 Republicans in Congress — 246 in the House of Representatives and 54 in the Senate — Trump now had the explicit support of 11.

Republican presidential front-runner Donald Trump on Thursday won endorsements from two more U.S. Congress members as he battled to be his party's nominee.

Trump, a billionaire businessman, U.S. Sen. Ted Cruz of Texas and Ohio Gov. John Kasich were vying for the nomination to represent the Republican Party in the Nov. 8 general election.

"Donald Trump is the only person who has what it takes to shake up the status quo and entrenched bureaucrats in Washington," Miller said in a statement.

Jeff Miller of Florida, who will retire from the Republican-controlled Congress at year's end, capping 16 years in the House, has chaired the House Veterans Affairs Committee.

Bill Shuster of Pennsylvania, also in his 16th year in the House, has chaired a powerful transportation committee.

Trump backers in Congress have argued that many more lawmakers privately expressed support for Trump, but still have to run in primaries and so have publicly remained neutral.

Rep. Kevin Cramer of North Dakota, who endorsed Trump this month, said in an interview that the Trump campaign was cranking up its outreach to Congress.

Cruz, a small-government Tea Party favorite, has snared more endorsements from Congress members.

The most prominent Republican lawmakers to publicly endorse Trump was Sen. Jeff Sessions, who has been advising the campaign on foreign policy.

The others were Reps. Chris Collins, Duncan Hunter, Tom Marino, Tom Reed, Scott DesJarlais, Lou Barletta and Renee Ellmers. REUTERS

"Lucifer in the flesh"

Retired U.S. House Speaker John Boehner, a Republican, weighed in on the presidential race during a talk at Stanford University on Wednesday, according to the student newspaper, saying he could vote for his golfing and "texting buddy" Trump but harshly criticizing Cruz.

"Lucifer in the flesh," Boehner said of Cruz, who is a staunch fiscal conservative and who angered many of his colleagues in Congress by leading a government shutdown in 2013.

"I get along with almost everyone, but I have never worked with a more miserable son of a bitch in my life," Boehner said.

Cruz said Boehner was allowing "his inner Trump" to come out.

"What made John Boehner mad is that I led a movement of the people to hold Washington accountable," Cruz told reporters.

THE FOREMAN OPINION

TOM FOREMAN

With the general election looking ever more like a Trump-Clinton battle royale, I don't know what is happening behind the Democratic parapets — but I can imagine.

It's late. The front door is locked at HRC HQ, but rattles suddenly. "He's at the gate!" the campaign manager shrieks. Staffers leap.

"Quiet down, Mook. That's the FedEx guy." Hillary Clinton stares at poll numbers and thinks about the jitters running through her crew. Like the Republicans, she had written Donald Trump off as a joke. Then he decimated the field. And now he was coming for her. The last thing she needed was for everyone to fall apart. As it was, half the staff was giddy that Trump appeared to be sewing up the nomination, the other half was terrified. She calls out. "Joel, Amanda, John, Huma — everyone — get in here. Give it to me straight. What are the negatives?"

A functionary clears his throat. "Um — a lot of people really don't like him. He's shifted position numerous times. He has insulted minorities, women and even some voters. He plays fast and loose with facts, and his grasp of policy seems squishy."

"I asked for the negatives. Those all seem like positives for me."

"They should be. But none of it seems to matter. He draws oceans of new voters, and they seem ready to forgive every misstep."

"But I'm a better debater, right?" the contender says.

"In a classic sense, yes."

"And I have more experience in government?"

"Of course."

"And I could be the first female president!"

"Absolutely."

"I've heard enough," she says. "We can take this guy."

The staff disperses, most leaving for the night. The candidate wanders through the dim offices and finds her husband with a clipboard near the storage room. "You think I can beat him, don't you, Bill?"

"No question," he replies.

"So what are you doing?" she asks.

"I'm doing what your supporters ought to be doing. Counting canned goods. Because win or lose, it could be a long siege."

Man in panda suit shot after bomb threat at Baltimore TV new station

The station said it evacuated the building after the bomb threat and a fire. The station said firefighters put out a fire in the gas tank of a car in the station's parking lot.

A man wearing a white panda suit who allegedly made a bomb threat at Fox Television's Baltimore affiliate on Thursday was shot and wounded by police outside the building, authorities said.

A counter-sniper shot the man as he emerged from Fox affiliate WBFF and ignored police orders to take his hands out of his pockets, police spokesman T.J. Smith told a news conference.

WBFF reported on its website that the man broke into the station demanding that it cover a story about an unspecified government conspiracy.

Smith said the man had "displayed something that appeared to be wires and some other things inside his jacket that appeared to be some kind of explosive device." The device turned out to be composed of harmless materials, including chocolate candy bars wrapped in tin foil, he said.

He said the man appears to be in his 20s. He has not been identified.

WBFF, which is owned by Sinclair Broadcast Group (SBGI.O), said a bomb robot scanned the man for nearly an hour before officers removed his clothing, picked him up and carried him to an armored police vehicle.

Station News Director Mike Tomko said on the station's website that the man was wearing a white, one-piece panda suit with a surgical mask and sunglasses.

US high court approves rule change to expand hacking power of FBI

U.S. Chief Justice John Roberts transmitted the rules to Congress, which will have until Dec. 1 to reject or modify the changes to the federal rules of criminal procedure. If Congress does not act, the rules would take effect automatically.

The Supreme Court on Thursday approved a rule change that would let U.S. judges issue search warrants for access to computers located in any jurisdiction despite opposition from civil liberties groups who say it will greatly expand the FBI's hacking authority.

Magistrate judges normally can order searches only within the jurisdiction of their court, which is typically limited to a few counties.

The U.S. Justice Department, which has pushed for the rule change since 2013, has described it as a minor modification needed to modernize the criminal code for the digital age, and has said it would not permit searches or seizures that are not already legal.

Google, owned by Alphabet Inc, and civil liberties groups such as the American Civil Liberties Union and Access Now contend the change would vastly expand the Federal Bureau of Investigation's ability to conduct mass hacks on computer networks.

They say it also could run afoul of the U.S. Constitution's protections against unreasonable searches and seizures.

While Congress can reject amendments to the rules that govern federal courts, it rarely exercises that authority and is not expected to do so during a heated election year. And few lawmakers have shown interest in the subject.

Democratic Senator Ron Wyden of Oregon, condemned the rule change as having "significant consequences for Americans' privacy," and vowed to introduce legislation to reverse it.

"Under the proposed rules, the government would now be able to obtain a single warrant to access and search thousands or millions of computers at once; and the vast majority of the affected computers would belong to the victims, not the perpetrators, of a cybercrime," Wyden said in a statement. Facebook in class of its own as ad revenue soars

After underwhelming results from Apple Inc., Google Inc., and other big tech names, investors finally found a friend in Facebook Inc. after the company shredded Wall Street's forecasts for revenue, profit and user growth.

Facebook's shares, which touched a record high of $120.79 on Thursday, closed up 7.2 percent at $116.73, giving a $22 billion boost to the social networking company's market value.

"FB remains in a class by itself across the combination of scale, growth, and profitability," J.P. Morgan Securities analyst Doug Anmuth said in a research note.

"While there are broader concerns of macro softness toward the end of 1Q, Facebook isn't seeing them."

The "Mother's Day" star has no patience for online bigotry.

MATT PRIGGE

matt.prigge@metro.us

"Mother's Day" is a light ensemble comedy, just like Garry Marshall's other holiday movies ("Valentine's Day," "New Year's Eve"). But at least in the storyline that stars Kate Hudson, it flirts with something more. The actress, 37, plays a woman whose conservative parents are so red-state she never told them she married an Indian man (Aasif Mandvi) — or that her sister married another woman. Hudson — who worked with Marshall back during 2004's "Raising Helen" — talks about how he touches on issues with a light hand and the pains (and joys) of social media.

First off, I wanted to ask about your half-brother, Wyatt Russell, who's fantastic in "Everybody Wants Some!!"
Yes! He's the best! [Laughs] I'm so proud. But if you grow up with someone, you sort of know. Wyatt was a hockey player, but deep down I always knew he'd act. Even when he said, "Oh, I'll never do that," I knew it was always in him. I remember going to see his little plays [when he was a kid]. He was doing "Oliver Twist" and he was the Artful Dodger. Nobody in our family knew he'd been practicing this Cockney accent. He came out on the stage, he tipped his hat and said, "'Ello, I'm the Artful Dodger." And we were like, "What just happened?!" It was so charming. He has something very special and very natural.

You've worked with Garry Marshall before. It looks like his sets are just fun hang-out spots.
That's Garry's whole thing. He's 81 and he's still making movies. He loves to make movies. He creates a real family experience, which makes for a very laidback, fun time. He wants it to be enjoyable. He doesn't like complications; he doesn't like conflict. He makes a particular kind of movie, and he's not reinventing the wheel. One time he said to me, "It's not always about making people laugh. Sometimes it's just nice to make them smile." He just wants people to be happy, and he's the same way on his sets.

Still, your subplot features some topical business about Texan parents and their fear of interracial couples and same-sex marriage.
When I read it, "Garry's hitting on some issues here, I like it!" [Laughs] But he does it in a very Garry Marshall way. He's touching on very serious issues that need to be addressed. But Garry's thing is all about hope, about optimism. He's hoping people can reach an understanding and have forgiveness on both sides. He makes it about family and what it is to accept and love each other. That's who Garry is.

These days we usually focus on people's bigotries.
It's incredibly rampant. You see it everywhere. I remember posting when same-sex marriage was made legal across the country. It was amazing to see the comments that came up on your feed. It was horrible. It's unbelievable that it still exists. But sometimes I think that's where social media is good, because you see it. It's still there. Don't ever think it's not. It's always a dialogue that should be constantly discussed.

As a non-famous person I can't imagine what it's like to be a famous person on social media.
[Laughs] I think social media's great. You can just block everybody. The whole "don't block" thing — I'm like, eff that, block 'em. I don't need that. Who does? You're an a—e, you alienate yourself. Bye!

"Mother's Day"

Director: Garry Marshall
Stars: Kate Hudson, Jennifer Aniston
Rating: PG-13

What is up with Julia Roberts' hair in Garry Marshall's "Mother's Day"? RON BATZDORFF

Like Garry Marshall's other ensemble holiday yuk-fests ("Valentine's Day," "New Year's Eve"), "Mother's Day" is the cinematic equivalent of a greeting card with a dumb, inoffensive joke you hastily grab at your local Hallmark. Marshall might even take that as a compliment.

Actually, maybe it isn't quite up to those heights: "Funny" greeting cards tend to have a coherent joke plus attractive, professional designs. "Mother's Day" is visually haphazard and generally slapdash, with a couple heaping helpings of slumming big-name stars barely staying awake through untold failed gags.

Famous faces fill in storylines concerning divorce (Jennifer Aniston and Timothy Olyphant), adoption (Julia Roberts and Britt Robertson) and death (Jason Sudeikis). They all sound dark, almost Bergmanesque. They're not played that way. Marshall and his four writers treat them like little more than light time-killers.

That even goes for the most topical thread, which finds Kate Hudson as a woman who's never told her red-state parents (Robert Pine and character actress Margo Martindale) that she married a non-American (Aasif Mandvi). She's kept mum so long that they don't even know they have a mixed-race grandson.

Let's be generous: An otherwise anodyne multiplex number in the tank for interracial and same-sex marriage isn't to be written off. Then again, Marshall directs (if that's the word) his scenes for low-watt gags and awkward cutaways. MATT PRIGGE

"Ratchet & Clank"

Director: Jericca Cleland, Kevin Munroe
Voices of: James Arnold Taylor, David Kaye

"Ratchet & Clank" is based on a beloved video game series, apparently. FOCUS WORLD

If you have no idea what a Ratchet or a Clank is, you might mistake "Ratchet & Clank" for just another off-brand animated romp — a tiny oddity like "Norm of the North" or "The Nut Job" that every now and then mysteriously slips into multiplexes, aiming only to trick gullible parents into a family night out. Instead, it's something much more annoying: a video game movie crossed with an origin story for an established brand. These days even the randos are tied to a bigger corporate hellbeast.

That brand is a long-running series of games, pairing a vaguely tiger-like being (the former) with a tiny robot out of '50s sci-fi (the latter). They zip across the universe, shooting things with big guns.

The movie does slightly more than that. It's a self-aware, joke-heavy piece of whiplash — although not so self-aware that it ever cops to baldly ripping off "Star Wars." To wit: Ratchet (voice of James Arnold Taylor) is a mopey orphan wallowing on a disused desert planet, longing to show the world his secret might. Fate conspires to have him join a squad of do-gooders battling a baddie (Paul Giamatti) who's constructed a massive gizmo that can destroy planets.

There's one novel idea: The main star of the intergalactic superheroes, Captain Qwark (voice of Jim Ward) is such an ego hound that he sells out to the bad guys when he feels the least bit underappreciated. Qwark, too, is a knockoff, or at least strongly reminiscent of "Futurama's" Zapp Brannigan, right down to his declarative speaking voice and yen for venality and cowardice. There is, however, a "sheep-a-nator," a machine that turns people into sheep. Otherwise this is a video game you can't play, and not even one of the better installments. It exists solely to birth more gamers, and as far as that goes it's quick to achieve game over. MP

"Papa Hemingway in Cuba"

Director: Bob Yari
Stars: Giovanni Ribisi, Adrian Sparks
Rating: R

Ernest Hemingway (Adrian Sparks) goes fishing with Giovanni Ribisi. YARI FILM GROUP

"Goddamn war. I hate it." Is it legal for a movie about Ernest Hemingway to have dialogue this bad? Granted, it's probably not a shock that a film titled "Papa Hemingway in Cuba" is clumsy with words, even if it is about one of America's finest writers.

At least Adrian Sparks, as the salty author, fares better than poor Giovanni Ribisi, who's forced to recite unsayable lines both in person and on the narration track. He's Denne Bart Petticlerc's semifictional stand-in: a lowly journo who, in the 1950s, writes his favorite author a powerfully wan fan letter, whose parade of trite cliches inspire Hemingway to whisk him off to his Cuban manse for some boozy, pre-Revolution hang time.

This is history writ broad and dumb, where a troubled icon is depicted as a moody jerk who only calms down to offer bland homilies and epic self-pity. All the while Ribisi drones through generic observations such as, "I felt like I was falling into a world of madness — and somehow it was up to me to stop it." Summing up his complex and troubled idol at the end, he can only offer, "I guess what he really wanted was true love." Artists struggle for immortality through their work; "Papa Hemingway" is so bad it ought to be tried for attempted homicide. MP

"Keanu"

Director: Peter Atencio
Stars: Jordan Peele, Keegan-Michael Key

Keegan-Michael Key and Jordan Peele made an action movie with a cat; what are you doing with your life? STEVE DIETL

The first movie by comedy duo Key and Peele isn't too different from the first sketch on their defunct show "Key & Peele." About 30 seconds long, the skit finds two black men — one yuppie, the other gay — pretending to be harder than they are because they think the other is a dangerous thug. "Keanu," by contrast, runs just under 100 minutes, and it mostly offers untold variations on a variation on the same satirical idea.

It's a rich idea, though, and Keegan-Michael Key and Jordan Peele are talented enough to puff it out without padding it out. Kittens help. "Keanu" finds the two trying to retrieve the beyond adorbs black-on-grey tabby that's been absconded with by local gang members (led by Method Man).

This requires subterfuge, in their case ditching their white-ish patois and pretending to be fearsome toughs (from "Allentown") named Tectonic and Shark Tank. What starts out as a feature-length "kitty!" YouTube video turns into a lampoon of both action movies and the 21st century concept of the black male. Key and Peele have touched on this for years, but rarely with guns of kitties. MP

Another Eli in the Big Apple, Giants grab Ohio State corner

A glance at the early portion of the 2016 NFL Draft.

MATT BURKE
matthew.burke@metro.us

The Giants chose to beef up their secondary Thursday, tabbing Ohio State cornerback Eli Apple. The pick came as something of a surprise considering the needs the Giants have in other areas and the fact that the cornerback position was considered a strength heading into the draft.

Apple has a freakish frame and can re-route receivers at the line. NFL.com's draft profile of Apple says that the corner "is extremely competitive when the ball is in the air" but that he "can be slow to diagnose and anticipate quarterback's plans."

Apple attended Eastern Regional High School in Voorhees, New Jersey.

The Giants will pick No. 40 overall and No. 74th overall on Friday.

The top of the draft Thursday night went mostly as planned as the Los Angeles Rams selected California quarterback Jared Goff No. 1 overall. The Eagles, who traded up in the draft with the Browns to land at No. 2, got their man in North Dakota State QB Carson Wentz. Ohio State defensive end Joey Bosa had been the No. 1 pick in many mocks early in the draft process and the San Diego Chargers happily scooped him up at No. 3.

Ole Miss tackle Laremy Tunsil had seen his draft stock tumble in recent weeks and he slid even further Thursday night possibly due to an ugly social media episode. Just prior to the start of the draft, his Twitter account posted a video of someone — who looked like Tunsil — smoking a bong/gas mask. Miami eventually took him at No. 13.

In slightly less bizarre draft day news, quarterback Ryan Fitzpatrick sent a message in the direction of the Jets. A source told ESPN's Adam Schefter that Fitzpatrick would "rather not play football" than play for the Jets at their current contract offer. According to Schefter's report, the Jets aren't going higher than $8 million per season and that is nowhere close to Fitzpatrick's desired number. The QB was a steady presence under center for the Jets last season, leading the team to a 10-6 record while throwing 31 touchdowns and 3,905 yards.

For full Jets draft coverage please see Metro.us.

Isles look to go up 2-0 vs. TB

Tampa Bay Lightning goaltender Ben Bishop is not easily rattled so it's unlikely that the Islanders will find the type of success they had against him in Game 1 as they will in Game 2 on Saturday (3 p.m., NBC). The rock-solid Bishop, a Vezina Trophy finalist, was pulled midway through the Game 1 loss as he gave up four goals in just 13 shots. The first game at Barclays Center in the series will be Game 3 this coming Tuesday. GETTY IMAGES

Toronto's Troy Tulowitzki, right, is a player who you can certainly dangle in fantasy trade discussions. GETTY IMAGES

PLAYERS YOU MIGHT WANT TO THINK ABOUT TRADING AWAY

Most fantasy baseball experts (present company included) preach patience in April. This is a sound and prudent approach for most situations. However, any experienced owner can tell you that sometimes, early struggles continue well into the season. Each year, there are a handful of well-regarded, established fantasy contributors who simply don't perform up to expectations for a variety of reasons. Today, we'll look at a few of 2016's early disappointments and try to determine who will rebound — and who won't.

Carlos Gomez

A top prospect who didn't break out until his age-27 season, Gomez averaged 22 home runs and 37 stolen bases from 2012-14. Last season, however, he battled myriad injuries and never got going, finishing with just 12 homers and 17 steals. Many owners saw him as an excellent buy-low opportunity, but he hasn't rewarded their faith so far. Gomez has yet to go deep this year and is just 2-for-4 on stolen base attempts. Never an especially patient hitter, Gomez has just two walks against 20 strikeouts through his first 19 games. He's also making weaker contact and hitting more grounders than ever before. SELL

OPINION

Kyle Bishop is a lead MLB columnist at RotoBaller.com. His articles and Fantasy Baseball Rankings are your secret weapon for winning fantasy leagues.

Jose Abreu

Abreu established himself immediately after defecting from Cuba, finishing in the top five among first baseman in four of the five standard fantasy categories (all but stolen bases) during his first two years in the majors. The third time hasn't been the charm to this point, however, as Abreu is currently hitting well below the Mendoza line and has only three home runs through 20 games. There haven't really been any drastic changes to his profile or approach, which suggests he's simply suffering from poor luck. Indeed, his .192 BABIP (batting average on balls in play) is lower than all but nine qualified hitters so far, and over 150 points below his career .344 mark coming into the year. BUY/HOLD

Troy Tulowitzki

For most of the past decade, Tulowitzki was the unquestioned No. 1 fantasy option at shortstop when healthy. Therein lay the rub, as he's played more than 130 games just three times in his career. True to form, Tulowitzki missed 34 games last year. But even when he was healthy, the veteran displayed some troubling trends. His walk and strikeout rates both moved in the wrong direction, and he drove the ball with less authority than usual. Scouts noted that his lower-half explosiveness appeared noticeably diminished, and he appeared to struggle catching up to fastballs, a pitch he typically feasted on. Leaving Coors Field after a midseason trade to the Blue Jays may have played a role, but it's possible that all those injuries are finally taking a toll on the 31-year-old. His lackluster start hasn't allayed that concern, and if Tulo isn't raking, the inevitable injury issues make it tough to justify relying on him. SELL

Aries Avoid controversy. You have much to gain by wholeheartedly going after your dreams. Discipline and high energy will lead to success. Focus on yourself and your talents.

Taurus Emotions will surface. Realign your thinking to overcome any uncertainty that someone is creating. Let intuition be your guide when dealing with people asking for a handout.

Gemini An honest approach is best for any deals or situations that put you in a vulnerable position. You don't want to get involved in something that might jeopardize your reputation.

Cancer Use your creative imagination in order to come up with unique, beneficial ideas. The help you offer others will lead to unexpected rewards.

Leo Take the initiative and follow through with your plans. Actions will speak louder than words and help you avoid criticism. Anyone who doesn't like what you do is probably jealous.

Virgo Keep your wits about you when dealing with pushy salespeople. Attend functions that will open your mind to different lifestyles and ways to improve your current situation.

Libra A short vacation or making special plans to spend time with someone you love will boost your morale and encourage you to make subtle improvements to your image and appearance.

Scorpio Try something totally different. It will encourage you to set new standards and make changes to where or how you live. Romance will enhance your life.

Sagittarius Fraternize with like-minded people who could help you achieve your personal goals. A change at home will be comforting and help you alleviate negativity.

Capricorn A couple of alterations to your home will give you the perfect setting to encourage your family to spend more time together. Money will come from an unexpected source.

Aquarius Consider your options and make personal, financial or health-related changes that will make you feel and look your best. Strive for greater freedom to follow your dreams.

Pisces Focus on yourself, not on someone else. You owe it to yourself to live out your dreams and to enjoy opportunities that come your way. Stop putting other people first. EUGENIA LAST
